Enhanced Interior Gateway Routing Protocol (EIGRP) is an advanced distance-vector routing protocol that is used on a computer network for automating routing decisions and configuration. The protocol was designed by Cisco Systems as a proprietary protocol, available only on Cisco routers. Partial functionality of EIGRP was converted to an open standard in 2013 and was published with ...

A virtual private network (VPN) extends a private network across a public network, and enables users to send and receive data across shared or public networks as if their computing devices were directly connected to the private network. Applications running across a VPN may therefore benefit from the functionality, security, and management of the private network.

In Figure 1, a network layer firewall called a "screened host firewall" is represented. In a screened host firewall, access to and from a single host is controlled by means of a router operating at a network layer. The single host is a bastion host; a highly-defended and secured strong-point that (hopefully) can resist attack.

EIGRP (Enhanced Interior Gateway Routing Protocol) is a distance vector routing protocol. It is used to route traffic between routers in a network. EIGRP is a hybrid protocol that combines features of both distance vector and link state protocols. It uses a DUAL algorithm to calculate the best path to a destination. EIGRP is supported on Cisco routers and other vendors' equipment. EIGRP is a classful protocol, which means that it does not support VLSM. EIGRP is a single hop protocol, which means that it only routes traffic between adjacent routers. EIGRP is a unicast protocol, which means that it sends traffic to a single destination. EIGRP is a reliable protocol, which means that it guarantees that packets are delivered to their destination. EIGRP is a fast protocol, which means that it converges quickly after a network change. EIGRP is a scalable protocol, which means that it can handle a large number of routers in a network. EIGRP is a secure protocol, which means that it can be configured to use authentication. EIGRP is a flexible protocol, which means that it can be configured to support a variety of network topologies. EIGRP is a powerful protocol, which means that it can be used to route traffic in a complex network.
